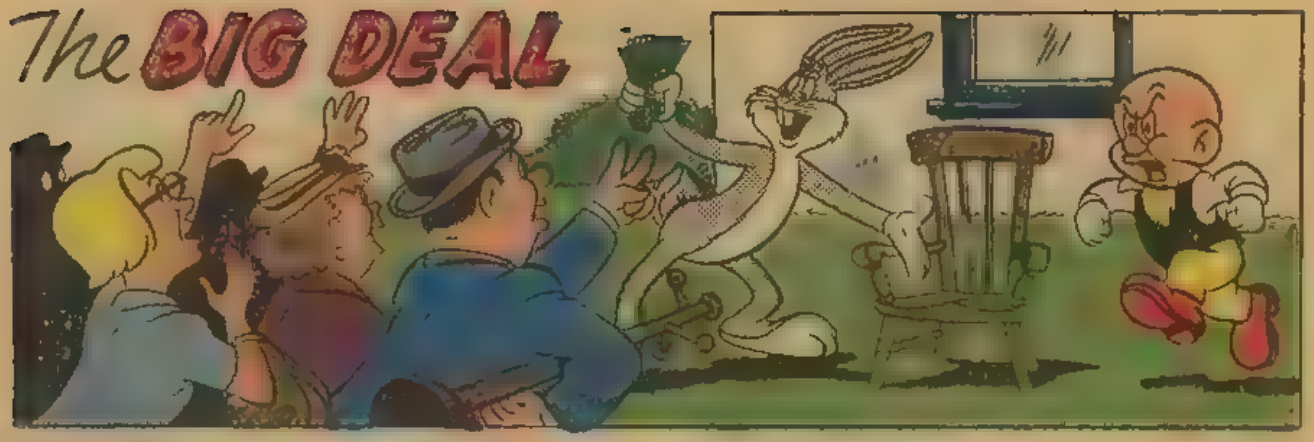
The BIG DEAL



"ZOWIE!" Bugs Bunny hopped up and down with glee. Then he stopped and peered closely at Elmer Fudd's round, bland face. "You're not just kidding me, are you, Doc?"

"A bargain's a bargain," Elmer replied, looking Bugs squarely in the eye. "You pull all those weeds out of my cawwot patch, and I'll give you a whole set of furniture. Is it a deal?"

Elmer had a hard job keeping a straight face as he thought about the furniture he had inherited from his great-aunt Lucy . . . furniture that had been stored in her cellar for years and was no longer of much use.

"It's a deal!" Bugs chortled. As he pranced off to Elmer's carrot patch, he muttered to himself, "Best deal I ever made, too! I wonder what's got into that old tightwad? Imagine . a whole set of furniture, just for clearing out these weeds! And how I need some new things for my burrow!"

Bugs tore into the weeds like a whirlwind. It was almost more than he could bear, working among those juicy, tender young carrots and not taking so much as a nibble. But Bugs meant to carry out his end of the bargain if it finished him . . and it nearly did. By the time he was through, his back had a permanent kink in it. He was tired and hungry, but very proud of himself. At last he dragged his aching bones over to Elmer's house and rapped wearily on the door.

"The job's done, Fuddsy," he groaned, "and if I do say so myself, your carrot patch never looked better."

Elmer glanced over at the garden and beamed happily. "For once you've done a weal day's work, Bugs. All wight. You'll find your set of furniture at the side of the house. Take it. It's yours."

Elmer choked back a laugh as Bugs loped eagerly around to the side . . . and slid to a startled stop! For a minute he could only stare . . . . then he danced in sheer rage.

"I knew it!" Bugs raved. "I just knew that cheapskate would pull a fast one on me!" The furniture was there, all right . . . . but it was so broken down and raggedy, it was ready to fall apart!

Bugs shook his fist at Elmer, who was doubled up with laughter by now. "I'll get even with you for this!" he howled.

Elmer replied coldly, "I pwomised you a set of furniture. I didn't say it was any good, did I? Now take it and get out of my yard, you silly Wabbit!"

When Bugs had gone, Elmer yawned sleepily. "Just watching that Wabbit work so hard has made me tired," he murmured "I think I'll take a nice, quiet nap."

Before long, the sound of a great commotion wakened Elmer. Running quickly to the window, he found a huge crowd of people milling all over his front lawn! And in their midst, was Bugs Bunny, excitedly waving his arms and shouting!

Purple with rage, Elmer rushed out into the yard. "What're you doing, you wascally Wabbit!" he screeched at Bugs. "These people are twampling my lawn all to pieces!"

Bugs gave him a cold stare. "Beat it, Doc," he snapped. "You're interrupting the big Bugs Bunny Auction Sale!" He waved a thick wad of money right under Elmer's trembling nose. "See? I've made almost a hundred dollars already!" Once again he began waving and shouting. "Only one item left, folks! This valuable antique chair. Who'll start the bidding at five dollars?"
